Indigenous Student Support at University

Going to uni?

Thinking about studying at university when you finish school, or already have an offer? Congratulations! Going off to university is a big step in life, and it's normal to feel nervous or unsure. Leaving the support of family and community can be scary. Thankfully, universities across Australia offer specialised support for Indigenous students starting (and continuing) their studies.

What support can I get?

While the types of support offered can differ between universities, here are some of the typical things you can expect:

- Individual and group study support and tutoring
- Peer mentoring programs
- Culturally safe spaces to study and relax
- Alternative entry programs
- Advisors to help with uni and scholarship applications
- Career advice and services

Where can I find out more about the uni I want to go to?

We've gathered links here to each university's page on support for Indigenous students. Take a look at the list:
